With the rise of immigration today caused by economic inequality, environmental disasters, and socio-political conflicts, living coherent lives stands contrary to the reality of separation, disconnection, and displacement taking place. The exhibition drawing on concepts informed by experiences of trauma and violence, displacement and social insecurity which has resulted in mobility and resettlement. Themes emerging include ideas about loss, pain and disorientation, which can appear when new cultural and social connections are formed. Borrowing its title from Pnina Motzafi-Haller's book by the same name, artists in this exhibition present multiple narratives drawing on memory, history, and lived experience to express the complex ongoing process of identity formation. Working between concrete and subconscious ideas, artists weave coherent narratives that challenge how we understand Africa today.
